BANK OF AMERICA BUSINESS ADVANTAGE

Why is my corporate account number different from my individual card number?

How your account is structured

Corporate account number:

This is an “umbrella” number used for making payments.

Individual card numbers:

These are used for making purchases.

Accounts with only one cardholder still have both an individual card number and a corporate account number.

What to expect each month

1. All payments will be made to the corporate account number.
2. Each individual card account balance will be reset to $0.
3. The previous month's unpaid corporate account balance and all new individual account balances will be combined and reflected as “New Balance Total.”

Account differences

	Corporate account	Individual card account
Account number	Shown only on statement	Shown on card(s) and statement
Credit limit	Maximum for company	Maximum for each individual card
Account used for	Making payments	Making purchases
Balance inquiry	Provides company balance	Provides individual card balance
Online Banking	Shows all company transactions	Shows individual card transactions

Scan the code to watch a brief video that explains the differences. You can also call the Customer Service number on this statement for more information.

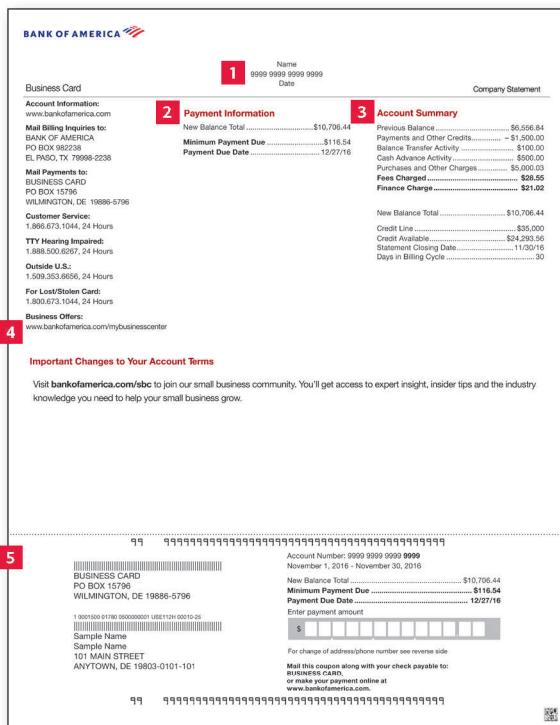

When you use the QR feature, certain information is collected from your mobile device for business purposes.

Please note, when you call the automated phone number or use Online Banking, entering or viewing the individual account number will only provide account information as it pertains to that specific individual account. For a picture of the overall company account balance, please refer to the corporate account number.
